ESTHETICIAN'S PASSION LEADS TO A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS

CREATING A PERSONAL LOOK THAT SUITS

each client's individual style is Angela Simons' passion. She started her first lash business, Beauty Studio 28, in June 2006, and was so successful that she founded a second business, Glamour Girl Lashes, in October 2009.

"I originally was traveling to clients and then got so busy, I couldn't fit all of the clients in traveling, so I opened a location in both Coral Gables and Boca Raton," explains Angela Simons, 33. "I had worked as a manager in retail, did makeup for several years and I'm a licensed esthetician - and wanted to own my own business."

So, this New York native got certified in eyelash extensions and saw a great opportunity to do something she was enthusiastic about. (She has since moved to Boynton Beach, closed her two business locations and opened Glamour Girl Lashes in Delray Beach, which specializes in eyelash extensions and eyelash products.)

"I customize a look for each individual's style. When clients come to me after having their lashes done elsewhere, they stay with me."

"Glamour Girl Lashes is different from other companies," Angela points out. "I only use top quality products (by Novalash and Lavish Lashes). I have chosen the best glues and lashes on the market. The lashes both look and feel natural, like my clients' own lashes. I specialize in eyelash extensions, and this is different than other companies that offer many services."

Angela's application and technique are different, too. "I customize a look for each individual's style," she expresses. "When clients come to me after having their lashes done elsewhere, they stay with me."

Eyelash extensions range from $250 to $550 at salons - Angela charges $300 - for a full set which can last up to eight weeks when properly cared for.

Angela looks forward to growing and expanding her business, while "doing what she's passionate about."
